

NOVEL RUN OF A SHIP.

From Oregon for England Puts into New Zealand for Repairs.

That a ship bound to Liverpool, England, from Portland, Oregon, should make this port is a somewhat peculiar incident, but such is nevertheless the fact, says the Auckland Herald of November 1. On October 17 the Dublin ship Rathdown put into Auckland in distress, having been thrown on her beam ends in a hurricane, causing the cargo of wheat and canned salmon to shift. The casualty occurred when the vessel was about 3000 miles from New Zealand, and about the same distance from the west coast of South America. As it was necessary for the ship to make some port in order to effect repairs the captain decided to make for New Zealand, considering that he would meet with better despatch than if he went to a South American port. That his decision was a wise one is borne out by the fact that in less than a week from the time of the ship arriving about 2500 tons of cargo were discharged and the ship placed in dock, the necessary repairs to the vessel being proceeded with in the meantime. The harbor authorities have extended every assistance to the master of the ship, who has expressed himself as being not only well satisfied with the despatch he has received, but with the liberal manner in which he has been treated in the matter of dues and charges, and in the economical handling of the cargo. The advantages of the port of Auckland for vessels in distress have been well brought out in this case; and have proved themselves equal to the emergency. As was remarked by Mr. Nicol, the Chairman of the Harbor Board, in discussing the case of the Rathdown: "It is very gratifying to know that as prompt despatch has been given to the ship as could have been given in any port of the world."

"Dear," said the sick man to his wife, "I wish you could get another blanket and put it on the bed, I think that when the doctor took my temperature a minute ago he took too much of it."—Indianapolis Journal.
